

Andrew replicates weekly pay

"I find it much easier to budget in weeks, not months."

Andrew, Birkenhead

Andrew works as a waiter and withdraws £250 of his pay every two weeks, essentially using Level to replicate the bi-monthly pay cycle he was used to in his old job. This is because he finds it "much easier to budget" over a fortnight than a month.

"That's how my head works...I budget over two weeks because that is how I always got paid."

He previously used overdrafts frequently, which carry a risk of debt spiralling. Now, he "never uses" them, instead relying on Level. This means he can manage any cash flow issues without taking on debt or risk paying interest.

Andrew confesses that, while he's not a big spender, he's "never been very sophisticated at money management". But Level is helping to change that.

"I love how simple and clear the app is. All the info I need is there in black and white – nothing more, nothing less."
